Pas optometrist peered into many

By BEVERLY PIKE
Mississippi Press Staff

If the eyes are the windows to the soul, then Dr. James Hinman probably knew his patients better than anyone else. He looked, literally, into thousands and thousands of eyes during his 37-year career as an optometrist.

Dr. Hinman befriended many people during that career. He had instigated a few "firsts" along the way and has been an instrumental factor in community programs.

Dr. Hinman was the first in Mississippi to use the most advanced electronic instrument for measuring eye pressure in glaucoma testing, and was the first eyecare professional in Jackson County to start using hard contact lenses.

BECOMING AN optometrist was a calling brought on by his own loss. At the age of seven, Hinman lost his right eye to a disease that went untreated because in the mid-20s there was no known treatment. "My eye had me thinking about going into optometry," he said, "so it just kind of fell into place."

He was born in Greenwood, Miss., but grew up in Carthage, Miss. "It was a frontier town compared to Greenwood," Hinman recalled. "Greenwood was, at that time, the most advanced area in Mississippi by far, so this took me back in time."

He was graduated in 1937 from Carthage High School and in 1942 from Millsaps College with a bachelor of arts degree in English and a minor in French. He left Millsaps to do carpentry work in a shipyard in Chickasaw, Ala., and remained there until he received word that the U.S. Army was drafting men previously turned down for service, as World War II grew into a true global conflict.

"When I read that the Army was taking one-eyed guys, I headed back up to Carthage to enlist," Hinman said. "This was around 1942, when they were drafting one-eyed guys."

"All my friends were in the service, and I had a hankering to get in," he said. "They stuck me in the place of a draftee, so I got a draftee's number. They spared one of their choice ones, you know."

After serving as a clerk with an infantry outfit from 1942-45,

Hinman attended Ole Miss to study some science courses and take a few prerequisites for entering the field of optometry. He was graduated in 1949 with his doctor's and bachelor of science degrees from the Illinois College of Optometry in Chicago. In his collegiate years, he was a member of Kappa Sigma fraternity.

THE HINMAN family moved to the Gulf Coast when Hinman's father got a job in a local shipyard. His dad worked in the yard for a few months, then opened a store on Market Street where he did a little of everything, from selling real estate and sewing machines to working on income tax returns.

Hinman credits his entrepreneurial father with introducing the window fan to Pascagoula.

The Hinman family was also involved with singing, as was the Purdy family, so it was only a matter of time — and tunes — before Hinman married his wife-to-be, Mitzi Purdy.

"We did an awful lot of singing at the Purdy house on Magnolia Street," he recalled.

"There was just an automatic meeting there," he said. "We had something in common, very much in common. And when I came back out of school, we got married. She's played a large part in all of this," referring to a life that he considers has been good to them both.

Dr. Hinman opened his first office on Delmas Avenue, across the street from the main fire station, where Scranton's Restaurant is now located. He had rented a place which was built as an office and home combined. His wife Mitzi worked in the office with him.

"Judge Chidsey built this combination with a nice front yard. It was a nice convenience because the rent was so low, and, well, I didn't have any money," he remembered of his beginning practice.

"Actually I rented it from his daughter because he was long since dead . . . but not forgotten." Hinman said he found out a few years later that a researcher with Bausch & Lomb's Optical Division discovered that the first contact lens patent originated in Pascagoula, in 1903.

HIS FRIEND, Judge Chidsey, had notarized and drawn up an application for this inventor. Hinman believes this man is kin to Lin Jacobson who now has an office on Jackson Avenue. "He's related to him," Hinman said, "but the inventor's name escapes me."

"Judge Chidsey was a special, scientifically-minded person who was the justice of the peace, and he dabbled in science. He was interested in this type of thing and probably encouraged

Judge Chidsey was a special, intuitively-minded person who was the justice of the peace, he dabbled in science. He was interested in this type of thing and probably encouraged the man to apply for the patent."

As far as he knows, Dr. Hinman said his office had the first integrated waiting room of any health care professional in Pascagoula. This was in the early '50s, he said. "Not because I hadn't the room, because I could have sat them apart. But I've never had a segregated office," he said. "We didn't believe in that."

Hinman said this brought on nasty phone calls from the county's White Citizens Council, a local version of the Ku Klux Klan. His wife handled all the calls and, in spite of them, the council could not impose racial segregation in Hinman's office.

After practicing about three years in his rented office, the optometrist built a new office on Jackson Avenue where he practiced until he retired in June of 1988.

SINCE HIS retirement, the office has been demolished to make way for other offices on Jackson Avenue.

Not only did Hinman have a "hankering" to get into the U.S. Army, he also had a hankering to get into everything else. He has chaired the Red Cross blood program for four years and chaired the board of directors of the Jackson County Chapter of the American Red Cross for two years.

He was instrumental in beginning the Jackson County Head Start program and served as vice president of the organization for seven years. He served five years with the Jackson County Civic Action Committee, was a school board trustee for four years with Our Lady of Victories Parish Schools, and served the Pascagoula parish as extraordinary minister.

Dr. Hinman has been a Pascagoula Rotarian since 1968 and has been a member of the American Optometric Association for 35 years.

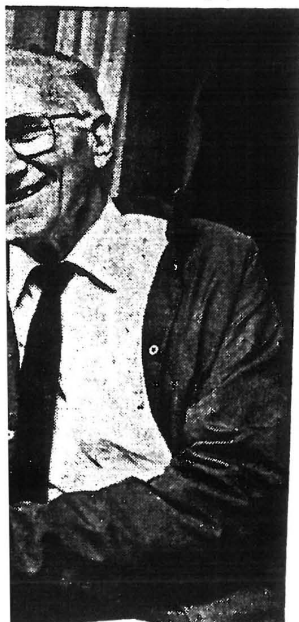

And in between this and that, he and his wife Mitzi have reared four children who are now grown. The Hinmans have seven grandchildren with whom they spend much of their time.

Since he's retired, Dr. Hinman enjoys walking several miles each day. Other hobbies include swimming, boating and reading. Oh yes, and watching "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood."

Caitlin McNally and Cody Cox tied the knot in March.

by Nicole Marquez
May 30, 2012

Wedding season isn't always a walk in the park for us southerners. Usually the heat and humidity begins to creep its way in, turning any outdoor wedding celebration into a sweat marathon.

However, this was not the case when two of Jackson's most charming, friendliest and most talented local musicians and baristas (he works at Cups, she at Sneaky Beans), Cody Cox and Caitlin McNally, walked down the aisle for the first time as husband and wife.

Sunshine and a comforting breeze set the stage for our two lovers, who also form the musical duo Liver Mousse. On Saturday, March 24, at around 3:30 p.m., I walked down the brick sidewalk leading into The Commons at Eudora Welty's Birthplace. Appropriately, the wedding venue is located behind Ole Tavern on George Street, which is like a second home to the couple.

Inside, the number of attending family and guests made for an intimate mix of people that made the space feel just right—not too crowded and not too bare (less really is more).

Each row of chairs was decorated with fresh, white and yellow flowers—perfect colors for a perfect day. Soft melodies from Tyler Kemp on a keyboard near the altar drifted throughout the room.

When the clock hit 4 p.m., everyone took a deep breath—it was time. A small parade of bridesmaids, groomsmen and family members made their way to their designated spots. Each bridesmaid walked down the aisle in a silvery-gray strapless dress, holding a bouquet of yellow and white flowers, the same arrangement from the rows. The four groomsmen were in full tuxedos accompanying the four bridesmaids.

As each got into place, the room filled with anticipation for the bride.

As the wedding march began to play, Caitlin's sweet giggle came from the back of the room. She entered with her father by her side, and just the sight of her happiness would have brought tears to anyone's eyes. Caitlin had on a simple, short-sleeve, floor-length white dress, her soft curls falling on either side of her shoulders. Most brides look like fairytale princesses as they walk down the aisle, but this bride was so much more. She was a sprightly fairytale angel—an all-over being of utter beauty. Though her dress was simple, it looked like a masterpiece. This radiant bride took everyone's breath away, especially the groom's. Cody stood in a trance with his eyes on Caitlin.

Tears began to well in eyes everywhere in the room as the ceremony began. The looks and smiles exchanged between the couple were sweet and playful as the pastor, Stacey Andrews, went over how the couple had met and fell in love. He began with when the couple met: "Caitlin was passing through Jackson heading to Oxford, Miss., with a friend. She stopped to get coffee and, lo and behold, Cody was behind the counter taking orders. It was (during) that first exchange that these two became smitten with each other."

It was apparent that Caitlin and Cody were very much in love when they recited their vows to one another, which was probably my favorite part of the ceremony. Each was soft-spoken; there was no way to hear them, which was meant to be. Everyone attending witnessed this sacred vow between the two.

The happy couple gazed at one another as they said, "I do," and joined hands as Andrews announced them Mr. and Mrs. Cody Cox. Everyone cheered as the newlyweds walked down the aisle to Queen's "You're My Best Friend"—priceless.

After the ceremony, guests went into the courtyard to congratulate the couple. Once outside and spread out, everyone seemed joyful and completely relaxed. Everyone moved freely about, with no ridiculous wait to see the new couple.

The bride possessed the qualities of a giddy child opening presents from Santa Claus on Christmas Day. The groom looked like the luckiest guy in the room—as if he were taking the coolest chick in school to prom.

Good things happen to deserving people. Little did this friendly, down-to-earth, talented and well-deserving couple know when they met at Cups that summer day almost two-and-a-half years ago that the universe would align, forever reminding how wonderful they are, inside and out—to the rest of the world, but most importantly, to each other.

Nicole Marquez is a native of Hot Coffee, Miss. She met Caitlin during a routine fire drill, and the two have remained friends since.

Martin E. Hinman Drowns In Pond

Martin Edward Hinman, nine-month-old grandson of Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Hinman of Pascagoula, drowned Monday in a shallow pond at his home in Seminary.

The baby had been placed in a stroller on the driveway of his home for his daily sunbath. His mother, Mrs. M. E. Hinman, went into the house and looking out of the window a few minutes later, missed the child.

It is believed the stroller rolled down the inclined driveway and, toppling over, partly submerged the baby on the edge of the pond.

Artificial respiration and emergency treatment failed to revive the child.

Services were held at Collins Tuesday. Interment was in Collins cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. Hinman and their son, James Hinman of Pascagoula left for Seminary immediately upon hearing of the tragedy.

He was the recipient of the Good Conduct Medal for Active Military Service, was a platoon leader driver during JRX Empire Glacier Mission in February 1980, received a Commendation Medal for Meritorious Achievement, and was a member of the Alpha Force Joint Task (Blue Star 82) from November through December 1981. Mr. Frazier was honorably discharged in March 1987.

Survivors include his wife, Kathy Moore Frazier of Vancleave; two step-sons, Danny Drieling and Bryan Drieling of St. Martin; his parents, Alfred D. and Wanda Frazier of Moss Point; two sisters and brothers-in-law, Brenda and Tommy Tootle of Vancleave and Teresa and Choppy Cameron of Biloxi; his brother and best friend, Darrell W. Frazier of Moss Point; six nieces; one great-niece; two nephews; one great-nephew, and numerous aunts, uncles, cousins and other relatives.

Visitation will be from 1-2 p.m. today, Nov. 26, at First Baptist Church of Vancleave, where the funeral service will follow at 2 p.m. The Rev. Greg Eddie and Crystal Fawcett, Felicia and Brian Burchett, Terri and Kenny Noble, Traci Saucier; nine great-grandchildren, and numerous other relatives.

Visitation will be from 6-9 p.m. Monday, Nov. 27, at Holder-Wells Funeral Home in Moss Point.

Funeral service will be at 10:30 a.m. Tuesday, Nov. 28, at the funeral home chapel with the Rev. Bobby Rone officiating. Interment will follow in Coleman Cemetery.

Arrangements are by Holder-Wells Funeral Home, Moss Point.

Survival

of certain lung cancer patients a median of two months. It was their first new treatment in 20 years.

"We are now looking at changes in survival that are very modest," acknowledged FDA drug chief Dr. Robert Temple.

But, he said, "it's hard to say three months' more survival is not a value to people who have a terminal illness. Most people given that option would choose to be treated. Who are we to say no?"

"Sometimes healthy people have the arrogant viewpoint that 'you are so sick, what are a few months longer?'" agreed Dr. Manfred Karobath of Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, maker of riluzole and taxotere. "They are fighting ... and you have to respect that."

The key is ensuring patients don't trade quality of life — suffering more side effects — for a little more time, said Dr. Ronald Keeney of the American Academy of Pharmaceutical Physicians. Patients may have to take a drug for two years just to realize an extra two months of life, he said.

"The hope is these drugs will be used in combination, or used in people a bit healthier, so that you will eventually get significantly more impact," added Diane Blum, executive director of Cancer Care Inc.

And the FDA is pushing companies to study drugs in healthier people instead of resting on an approval to treat the worst cases.

GOP

As part of a temporary spending bill, Clinton and the congressional Republicans agreed to a seven-year budget plan, but also to protect Medicare, education, the environment and other spending programs the president considers important.

But both sides must still work out major disagreements on how those goals will be met.

"We cannot begin to resolve our differences until we first know what they are," the Republican lawmakers wrote Clinton.

In a response Friday, White House chief of staff Leon Panetta wrote that neither the president's budget nor Congress' plan satisfies the objectives of the fragile agreement reached last Sunday. But he said he was not prepared to cite spe-
